Available by boat species: Pacific Halibut pink salmon fishing over exotic years, pink salmon return for the first time must pass through many puget sound, and make them available to small boats and beach anglers that use only basic fishing gear and techniques. Pink salmon are not the strongest swimmers, so they often embrace coastlines and stay out of great torn tides. The best catch rates often occur in the mornings and evenings. The pink color is most used for all lures and flies by anglers. Pink salmon are often mistaken for small wild chinook or even wild coho so be sure you know it's properly identified. Fishing boats there are two main fishing methods for pink salmon from a boat, trolling and casting. Troll using downrigger to deal with your depths you want to fish. Most pink salmon are caught at depths of 20 to 60 feet. The key to trolling is using a small flasher of any color, which is an absorber for pink salmon to swim along and hopefully strike in your deception. The most common deception is a small pink squid (Hotchi) followed by a pink spoon. Feel free to perfume up your deception, however bait is not required. Tie the deception 16-24 inches behind the flasher (18-25 pounds of monofilaunt) and deploy his gear 10-30 feet behind the boat. The speed of the boat moving through the water should be 2 to 4 miles per hour. Casting in salmon from a boat using methods and Described in coastline fishing. Beach fishing there are two main methods used for pink salmon beach fishing, casting lures and flying fishing. Anglers use both fishing methods to target the same type of water and can have similar success. As pink salmon are more prone to swimming close to the beach, most public parks and public docks across the puget sound offer good fishing opportunities. Lures casting - pink buzz bombs and pink little squid (hootchie) jig are often used and fish the same way by casting away from the beach and trying to jig it as you put it in the ring. A medium to medium/heavy rod with a 20 to 30 pound line is the only thing you need to land these fish. Fly Fishing - The most common fly used is a pink clozer. Seven to eight flyweight bars and with either a float or a slow sink tip line will provide enough spine to land salmon as well as create the necessary action on your flight to draw a few strikes. Available by boat by boat by Shoreline public access sites, such as Parks and Pier Point without spot some
